

Peter Montague, Ph.D. is a historian and journalist whose work has appeared in Alternet; Counterpunch; Grist; Huffington Post; Multinational Monitor; The Nation; New Solutions; OpEdNews; Race, Poverty & the Environment; Rachel's Environment & Health News (editor, 1986-2009); Ramparts; TomPaine.com, Truthout, and elsewhere. He is a member of the National Writers Union, UAW Local 1981, AFL-CIO. He was co-written two books -- Mercury (1970), and No World Without End (1972).

He is a Fellow with the Science & Environmental Health network (Ames, IA), presently working on a short book with the working title Democracy Rules about what it will take to create a democracy that cannot be hacked by billionaires and that might survive the shocks that lie ahead: global heating, loss of jobs to automation, the creation of machines with general intelligence that exceeds human capacities, and destruction of the biosphere by "economic growth." He lives in New Brunswick, N.J. Email: pm8525@gmail.com